MoMA PS1 TO PRESENT FIRST MAJOR EXHIBITION OF JUMANA MANNA IN THE US OPENING SEPTEMBER 22

July 19, 2022 – MoMA PS1 will present the first major museum exhibition of Jumana Manna (Palestinian, b. 1987) in the United States. On view from September 22, 2022 to April 17, 2023, the exhibition brings together nearly 20 works including two recent films, Wild Relatives (2018) and Foragers (2022), along with a series of new and existing sculptures, charting the artist's multidisciplinary practice that explores the paradoxical effects of preservation practices in agriculture, science, and the law. Across the works in the exhibition, from sculptures to films, the land and its rhythms are explored as the basis for ways of life that have undergone duress while also resisting, evading, and transforming hegemonic power structures.

Focusing on the land in the face of increasing forms of alienation from it, Manna's films use a range of narrative methods to examine how land-based practices like farming and foraging are embroiled in and struggle against neoliberal and colonial policies and in turn, climate change. Drawing from specific examples, such as the first withdrawal from the Svalbard Global Seed Vault in 2015 in response to the Syrian war—the subject of her film Wild Relatives—Manna underscores the scientific limitations in recovering the loss of biological life, in all of its forms. Additionally, her work visualizes the slow violence of industrial agriculture while asking poignant questions about what kind of future is possible in a precarious present.

In her new film Foragers, which makes its New York premiere in the exhibition, Manna moves between documentary and fiction to chronicle confrontations between Palestinian pickers of the wild growing herbs 'akkoub and za'atar and the Israeli Nature Protection Authority, which has deemed the plants endangered. The foragers' refusal and the punishments they face, from large fines and potential jail time, at times takes on an absurdist and comical tone that raises key questions around the politics of extinction—namely who determines what gets to live on and how. In both of Manna's films, plants and seeds are primary subjects, and the relationship between human labor and the land is essential to their narrative structures.

A centerpiece of the exhibition is a large-scale installation of new sculptures, which take inspiration from the fragmented remains of khabyas, traditional and now obsolete structures for grain storage in the Levant. The sculptures are placed in dialogue with the artist's signature industrial plinth assemblages, which borrow materials found in the urban environment—from construction sites to drainage systems. Through these juxtapositions, Manna considers the shift of systems of storage from sources of sustenance and regeneration tied to agricultural life cycles to spaces of accumulation and centralized economies of capital growth. These formal amalgamations of architecture speak to Manna's ongoing sculptural inquiries into improvised infrastructures in places where infrastructure is built to fail, as well as questions of recursion, materiality, and scale.
