

MoMA PS1 PRESENTS FIRST US EXHIBITION OF ARTIST AYOUNG KIM OPENING NOVEMBER 6

LONG ISLAND CITY, New York, November 4, 2025—MoMA PS1 presents a major exhibition of artist Ayoung Kim (Korean, b. 1979), featuring a suite of video installations throughout the museum's expansive third-floor galleries. On view November 6, 2025 through March 16, 2026, Ayoung Kim: Delivery Dancer Codex marks the first time all three works from Kim's celebrated trilogy are shown together. Recognized as an artist on the vanguard of digital innovation, Kim uses videogame engines, live-action footage, and generative AI to create speculative narratives that collide geopolitics, synthesize mythologies, and interrogate technologies. Seen together, her works examine the evolving relationships between data, human beings, and the environment to surface connections between biopolitics, queerness, and xenophobia.

The exhibition marks the US premiere of Kim's Delivery Dancer trilogy. Set in a fictitious Seoul, the first video in the series, Delivery Dancer's Sphere (2022), follows female delivery drivers En Storm and Ernst Mo (whose names are anagrams of "monster"). Kim sets her doppelgänger protagonists within endlessly regenerating routes, devised by an algorithm named Dancemaster. Featuring live-action footage from actors in real locations, the work—which Kim describes as a "pandemic fiction"—centers labor within the gig economy, which skyrocketed in both Korea and the US during recent years. In the cinematic sequel Delivery Dancer's Arc: 0° Receiver (2024), Kim sets Ernst Mo and En Storm within a futurist multiverse, in which they are tasked with a new objective: delivering time. Transformed into agents who traverse calendar mechanics and astronomical technologies, Mo and Storm travel through disjointed realities within Kim's narrative. Blending CGI, live-action footage, and gaming engines, the three-channel video blurs space and time, self and other, in a fraught narrative of emotional entanglement. The most recent chapter in the series, Delivery Dancer's Arc: Inverse (2024) takes place in the alternate universe Novaria, wherein Kim's recurring protagonists must deliver lost artifacts. The monumental three-channel video installation draws attention to traditional temporalities and worldviews erased by Western modernism through the standardization of the Gregorian calendar. The worlds within Kim's videos extend into the galleries through sculptures of sundials, mobile phones, mirrors, and mannequins, as well as a monumental wallpaper work. In the trilogy's central deliverables—urban commodities, cultural antiquities, and time itself—Kim challenges capitalist pressures to meet increasing global demands through self-optimization.
